Advancing American Freedom (AAF) is a nonprofit organization that promotes and defends the timeless, self-evident truths conservatives have always championed—individual liberty, personal responsibility, limited government, and the rule of law²—even as many abandon those principles in favor of political expedience. AAF will remain an anchor to windward and “will continue to serve as a beacon for conservative ideas, a reminder to all branches of government of their responsibilities to the nation”³ and believes American prosperity depends on ordered liberty and self-government. AAF believes that Americans have the fundamental right to associate and disassociate freely. AAF files this brief on behalf of its 17,656 members in the Sixth Circuit including 6,470 members in Ohio.

INTRODUCTION

This case concerns the freedom of organizations and their supporters to exercise their First Amendment protected rights to speech and association. Political association is central to America’s history of liberty. Alexis de Tocqueville, in observing Americans, wrote that, “[t]he art of association” was “the mother science; everyone studie[d] it and applie[d] it.”⁴ The Supreme Court has “long understood as implicit in the right to engage in activities protected by the First Amendment a corresponding right to associate with others,” Ams. for Prosperity Found. v. Bonta, 594 U.S. 595, 606 (2021) (quoting Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 622 (1984)) and that right includes the right to do so anonymously. Id. at 619-20 (Thomas, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). See also, McIntyre v. Ohio Elec. Comm’n, 514 U.S. 334, 362-63 (1995) (Thomas, J., concurring in the judgment) (noting that, in 1784, New Jersey Governor William Livingston, under the pseudonym Scipio, “was at work writing anonymous articles that defended the right to publish anonymously as part of the freedom of the press”).

Yet the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) conditions charitable tax exemptions for some organizations on their relinquishing those rights for themselves and their substantial supporters. Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6033(b)(5), “many 501(c)(3) organizations must annually disclose to the Secretary of the Treasury ‘the total of the contributions and gifts received by it during the year, and the names and addresses of all substantial contributors.’” The Buckeye Institute v. Internal Revenue Service, No. 2:22-cv-04297, slip op. at 2 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 9, 2023). Substantial contributors are those who contribute “an aggregate total of $5,000 per tax year, if the contributed amount is more than two percent of the total contributions the organization receives in a tax year.” Id. (citing 26 U.S.C. § 507(d)(2)(A)). Although the IRS is required to keep this donor information confidential, a significant amount of donor data has nonetheless been leaked or hacked. Id. at 2-3. The district court thus rightly found that the IRS donor disclosure policy must survive heightened scrutiny. Id. at 12.

Freedom of association is an American tradition and is enshrined in the First Amendment. The government cannot condition participation in benefit programs on sacrificing a constitutionally protected right without that condition facing heightened scrutiny. And the government cannot collect massive amounts of data about Americans merely for its own convenience. As former Attorney General William Barr observed about the Consolidated Audit Trail, and Securities and Exchange Commission data collection project, “If the government can collect this information just in case, that’s the big-brother surveillance state.”⁵

ARGUMENT

I. The Freedom of Association is Just as Central to American Ordered Liberty as the Freedom of Speech and of the Press.

The Freedom of Association is an American tradition and is among those fundamental liberties protected by the Constitution. In early America, “[t]he art of association” is “the mother science; everyone studie[d] it and applie[d] it.”⁶ Alexis de Tocqueville observed that early Americans made a habit of forming associations. Unlike in aristocratic societies where aristocrats hold the power and those beneath them carry out their will, in America, “all citizens are independent and weak; they can hardly do anything by themselves, and no one among them can compel his fellows to lend him their help. So they all fall into impotence if they do not learn to help each other freely.”⁷

The American tradition of association is older than the nation itself. Early colonists left Europe for the New World hoping to establish societies where they could worship freely. Over a century and a half later, the American people similarly disassociated from the English Crown while retaining those institutions that experience had taught best vouchsafed their liberties. The freedom to associate and disassociate was, for the founding generation, at the heart of the American project.

The right to free association has thus long been recognized in American law. The Declaration of Independence explains that “Governments are instituted among Men” to secure the fundamental rights of the people. The Declaration of Independence para. 2 (U.S. 1776). The Declaration also describes the higher law upon which government is based and illuminates the “inalienable rights” that are “embedded in our constitutional structure.” McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. 742, 807 (2010) (Thomas, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment).

The Supreme Court has recognized the right to associate freely among those fundamental rights enumerated in the First Amendment. U.S. Const. amend. I. As the Court said in NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson, “It is beyond debate that freedom to engage in association for the advancement of beliefs and ideas is an inseparable aspect of the ‘liberty’ assured by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, which embraces freedom of speech.” 357 U.S. 449, 460 (1958) (citing Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 666 (1925); Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 324 (1937); Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303 (1940); Staub v. City of Baxley, 355 U.S. 313, 321 (1958)).

The Court has explained that “it is immaterial whether the beliefs sought to be advanced by association pertain to political, economic, religious or cultural matters.” NAACP, 357 U.S. at 460-61. The freedom of association “furthers ‘a wide variety of political, social, economic, educational, religious, and cultural ends,’ and ‘is especially important in preserving political and cultural diversity and in shielding dissident expression from suppression by the majority.’” Id. (quoting Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 622 (1984)).

Because effective expression so often depends on effective association, association, like speech, is of “transcendent value.” See Speiser v. Randall, 357 U.S. 513, 526 (1958) (“Where the transcendent value of speech is involved, due process certainly requires in the circumstances of this case that the State bear the burden of persuasion to show that the appellants engaged in criminal speech.”). The Court’s explication of the right of freedom of association “stemmed from the Court’s recognition that ‘[e]ffective advocacy of both public and private points of view, particularly controversial ones, is undeniably enhanced by group association.’” Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 15 (1976) (alteration in original) (quoting NAACP, 357 U.S. at 460). As Luke Sheahan writes, “Associations in a democracy are not a means to self-government; they are self-government. They are not one option for the ordering of human life; they are the order of human life.”⁸ The right to freely speak, and freely associate, strike at the heart of human freedom.

Anonymous political communication is an American tradition. The Federalist Papers, among the most well-known and most often cited discussions of the Constitution, were written pseudonymously. McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 343 n. 6. So were many of the antifederalists’ writings opposing the adoption of the Constitution. Id. As the Supreme Court has recognized, “[a]nonymity is a shield from the tyranny of the majority.” Id. at 357 (citation omitted). Anonymity thus “exemplifies the purpose behind the Bill of Rights, and of the First Amendment in particular: to protect unpopular individuals from retaliation – and their ideas from suppression – at the hand of an intolerant society.” Id.

It is thus natural that the right to associate anonymously is within the activity protected by the First Amendment. The Supreme Court has explained that “compelled disclosure of affiliation with groups engaged in advocacy may constitute as effective a restraint on freedom of association as [other] forms of governmental action.” Bonta, 594 U.S. at 606 (internal quotation marks omitted) (alteration in original) (quoting NAACP, 357 U.S. at 462). Further, “[t]he text and history of the Assembly Clause suggests that the right to assemble includes the right to associate anonymously.” Id. at 619-20 (Thomas, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). The IRS’s mass collection of donor information and the risk of exposure that comes with it does “constitute . . . a restrain on freedom of association,” id. at 606, and thus should be subject to heightened scrutiny.

II. The Supreme Court has Recognized in Other Contexts that the Government May Not Condition Benefits on the Recipient’s Relinquishing of Constitutionally Protected Rights.

When the government conditions a public benefit on a beneficiary’s sacrifice of constitutionally protected rights, those conditions face heightened scrutiny. In this case, the IRS requires some 501(c)(3) organizations to disclose private information about substantial donors meaning that donors who wish to support such organizations are forced to sacrifice their First Amendment-protected right to associate anonymously.

In Mahmoud v. Taylor, the Supreme Court considered a policy of the Montgomery County Public School District in Montgomery County, Maryland. This school district, serving America’s “most religiously diverse county,” would not allow parents to opt their children out of reading books with part of a curriculum directed at “disrupt[ing]” “heteronormativity” and “cisnormativity.” 606 U.S. ___, No. 24-297, slip op. at 2, 4 (2024) (internal quotation marks omitted). As the Court decided, compelling students to receive such ideologically driven instruction against the will of their parents likely violated the parents’ religious liberty. Id. at 41 (“[I]n light of the strong showing made by the parents here, and the lack of a compelling interest supporting the Board’s policies, an injunction is both equitable and in the public interest.”).

The Court explained that, “when the government chooses to provide public benefits, it may not ‘condition the availability of those benefits upon a recipient’s willingness to surrender his religiously impelled status.’” Id. at 32 (quoting Trinity Lutheran Church of Columbia, Inc. v. Comer, 582 U.S. 449, 462 (2017)). There, the Court determined that the appropriate test to apply in its assessment of the school district’s no-opt-out policy was strict scrutiny, under which “the government must demonstrate that ‘its course was justified by a compelling state interest and was narrowly tailored in pursuit of that interest.’” Id. at 35-36 (quoting Kennedy v. Bremerton School Dist., 597 U.S. 507, 525 (2022)).

In Carson v. Makin, the Court considered a Maine program that provided vouchers for private secondary education that was not available to students attending religious schools. 596 U.S. 767, 771-73 (2022). As the Court explained, “[b]y ‘condition[ing] the availability of benefits’ in that manner, Maine’s tuition assistance program . . . ‘effectively penalize[d] the free exercise’ of religion.” Id. at 780 (second alteration in original) (quoting Trinity Lutheran Church of Columbia, Inc. v. Comer, 582 U.S. 449, 462 (2017)). Such laws “must be subjected to ‘the strictest scrutiny.’” Id. at 780 (quoting Espinoza v. Montana Department of Revenue, 591 U.S. ___, 140

S. Ct. 2246, 2257 (2020)). As the Court made clear in Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 404 (1963), “It is too late in the day to doubt that the liberties of religion and expression may be infringed by the denial of or placing of conditions upon a benefit or privilege.”

In the case before this Court, the question is analogous to the above religious liberty cases in that it, too, challenges a government’s conditioning of a benefit on the sacrifice of a First Amendment-protected right. Just as state governments in Makin and Mahmoud effectively conditioned access to government funded education on parents forgoing a degree of their right to freely exercise their religious beliefs, so the donor disclosure requirement requires donors and 501(c)(3) organizations to forgo their right to associate anonymously if they wish to take advantage of relevant tax benefits. Just as heightened scrutiny was appropriate in Mahmoud and Makin, so it is here. The Court should affirm the district court’s decision that exacting scrutiny is applicable here.

III. The Collection of Data Invites Hacking and Abuse as Demonstrated Over and Over Again by Both Private and Government Information Databases.

Large, centralized government databases are catnip to hackers seeking troves of Americans’ personal information. In December 2024, “Chinese state-sponsored hackers breached the U.S. Treasury Department's computer security guardrails” stealing “documents in what Treasury called a ‘major incident.’”⁹ The “hackers compromised third-party cybersecurity service provider BeyondTrust and were able to access unclassified documents.”¹⁰ Similarly, In 2016, hackers broke into the Securities and Exchange Commission’s Electronic Data Gathering, Analysis, and Retrieval system (EDGAR).¹¹ EDGAR processes over 1.7 million electronic filings annually, and “traded on at least nonpublic 157 earnings releases,” enriching themselves by over $4 million.¹² In 2018, a hacker breached 60 million records of US Postal Service user account details even after being warned a year prior.¹³ Hackers stole the personal information of 21.5 million current and former federal government employees from Office of Personnel Management files in 2015.¹⁴ 26,000 current and former Defense Intelligence Agency employees experienced a

The IRS itself has repeatedly leaked information related to nonprofit organizations.²¹ In 2022, the IRS accidentally posted taxpayer information associated with 501(c)(3)s that had been reported through Form 990-T.²² In 2012, the IRS leaked information relating to application for tax exempt status of several organizations to ProPublica and similarly disclosed information about 31 other groups in 2013.²³ And an IRS employee disclosed an unredacted Form 990 for the National Organization for Marriage to a person claiming to be a reporter who then passed the information on to the Human Rights Campaign.²⁴ Further, in 2021, ProPublica obtained personal tax information for “thousands of the nation’s wealthiest people, covering more than 15 years.”²⁵ These leaks, further, do not include the threat posed by outsiders taking advantage of weak cybersecurity or poorly designed software.

The private sector has experienced massive breaches as well. On July 12, 2024, AT&T announced that someone illegally obtained records of phone calls and text messages from almost all its wireless customers,²⁶ and an April 2024 nationalpublicdata.com breach exposed 2.7 billion records, including names, addresses, dates of birth, phone numbers, and even Social Security numbers.²⁷

Whenever data is collected, privacy is at risk. The Supreme Court has recognized that fact as it did in NAACP v. Alabama. If the government wishes to collect data about Americans, and thereby threaten to expose their private associations, it should at least have to show that the policy in question can clear the bar of heightened scrutiny. This Court should affirm the district court's decision that exacting scrutiny is the applicable test in this case.
